Just-when-you-thought-it-was-safe...., from the book, play, movie & sand bucket of a similar name.

Bridges. Newer, about 25 years old, at most, bridges. Simple devices, really, with 2 main parts: Posts - a group of posts, sticking up out of some wet or deep place that even your 4 X 4 can't drive thru. Most times concrete, sometimes steel.

And a long flat part (actually several sections - one between each set of posts) You drive on the flat part (deck), and it sits on top of the posts.

Now think about this in the dead-center of your next bridge. The flat part ain't connected to the post part! It's just lying there! Even worse than that, it's just sitting there on a bunch of teeter-totter-like rollers!

This is to allow the bridge section to lengthen and contract as the temperature changes. The section actually rolls on the rollers, however, only a fraction of an inch per section (in theory). What keeps this stack of giant building blocks stacked?

Bicycles. 3-5-10-12 & 15 speeds to allow you a gear for every need. Hard lil' skinny tires, so you can go real fast. Hand brakes so you can stop, sometime real soon, now. Sliding them skinny tires this way and that.

Last week in Newport News, I saw the Evel Kenevel of biking. He was wearing a helmet, one of those with the hair slots all over it, and had his multi-speed racer churning - about 10 feet behind a school bus. The bus was going about 45 MPH in lots of late afternoon traffic. I was following about $\frac{1}{2}$ block back - figured most of the splatter would miss me from there.

The bus stopped for a traffic light. The biker couldn't see the light - All he could see was yellow bus back, from 10 feet and closing.

I guess so! - I had to turn right to come back to Richmond.
